"Neighbors, home folks." These are powerful words that form the sunshine of life and lighten the cares of the day.

¶ Although we are a company, we are made up of men who like to feel that we are home folks in this happy community.

¶ It is our aim and purpose to serve you as neighbors . . . to serve you just as we would want to be served. And to facilitate our work we ask your friendly co-operation.

In return we hold no secrets from you. The plans of the Company are your plans. Your needs are ours; and our needs are yours . . . we are neighbors.

Raindrops & Kilowatts Hundreds of billions of raindrops falling rivers-are converted into kilowatts by the mighty Martin Dam across the Tallapoosa raindrops, held in leash by concrete walls, is sent rushing through small gates at the top of the dam, then down 150 feet into the steellined penstock or water tunnel, 20 feet in diameter and 200 feet long. This mighty torrent rushes down through the tunn striking the blades of an immense water wheel, 12 feet in diameter and 74,000 pound in weight. The wheel is connected to the above by the vertical steel shaft. As the force of the water spins the wheel, the shaft turns the revolving part of the generator, housed within the stator or stationary part of the generator. The motion of the rotor within the stator generates electric current by the simple action of cutting the magnetic field set up by the stator. There are three of these giant turbine generators at Martin Dam, each capable of producing 45,000 horsepower, sufficient to light 50,000 homes and do the work of a quarter million people.
